

Jeff Netto's impressive Thai language timeline on twitter...

I followed Jeff's twitter challenge from the beginning. And from the start of the 6 week challenge Jeff stayed at the top of the pack.

But what really interested me was his pattern of study and how he switched the focus. He'll write for a bit, watch a video on YouTube, study vocabulary, and then perhaps get back to writing.

Jeff's twitter timeline for the entire six week challenge is below. It makes for a long read but if your aim is to see exactly how it can be done, then this it is.

A bit of relevant chatter has been included just because.

At the very bottom of the tweets are the many Thai resources Jeff used.

NOTE: As mentioned, in addition to Thai Jeff studied additional languages, but only the Thai tweets are noted below.

Jeff's six week Thai language challenge on twitter...

Jeff: I just joined the 6 weeks challenge in combination with my Thai Challenge!

- @6WCBot #Thai #Typing from Spoken World 58min
- @6WCBot Just the audio files for ThaiPod101, Thai Podcast, TYT, Spoken World, In Flight, Survival Phrases and whatever else I find online.
- @6WCBot I've come to the conclusion that it is IMPOSSIBLE to start learning Thai without audio files for everything you are studying!!

@terryfrd Yes! I slow down too. Sometimes it is very frustrating to hear a sound and, though you try hard, it does sound like the original

@terryfrd The ones that are similar to Mandarin are easier for me, but the remaining not at all! Could you share the methods you used? @WomenLearnThai When I was studying Mandarin, I focused on isolated words, and then I had a hard time using different tones together...

- @WomenLearnThai ...So now I'm focusing on learning then as they come with the words in context, basically ignoring the fact there are tones.
- @WomenLearnThai What is getting to me is the speed they talk! If it wouldn't be for the fact that I thought the same about Eng. I'd give up!
- @6WCBot With Anki (Thai) I learned two things: 1st, the program rocks!!! 2nd, I suck!! @AnyaPop Thanks for the hints! It is working. @6WCBot I don't understand why there are 2 Thai keyboards for Win and 1 for iPod, and all 3 of them are pretty different from each other! @6WCBot To make mistakes humbles us. Anki is definitely showing me that!
- @WomenLearnThai @terryfrd @bangkok Which keyboard is more common in Thailand: Kedmanee or Pattachote? (for Windows)

Jeff Netto's Thai language learning resources...

To keep a running tally in the Language Challenge stats, Jeff's used tags in his tweets. Most are easy to figure out. For instance, TY is Teach Yourself Thai, FSI is the Foreign Service Institute's free online language course, Thai_Ling is Thai linguistics, etc.

I've put the resources Jeff used along with the explanations of his tags.
